

Clayful Creations

I've been creating with Polymer Clay for over 15 years. It's a wonderful medium and I have tons of fun creating with it. It started out as a hobby, then a part time business and now it's what I do full time. I sold my creations for more than 12 years at several specialty stores in the Melbourne, Florida area but now I sell only online. I hope to have my own website one day but I'm not quite there yet. I feel very fortunate to be able to do something I love every day and selling online has been fun and a definite "learning" experience!

All of my Original Designs have been copyrighted by Clayful Creations since 1994. Copying and Dulication are prohibited without my written permission and infringements are reported to eBay's VeRO Program

Some operate under the mistaken belief that, once you purchase an item, it becomes yours to do with as you please or if you can download an image from the internet, that image - and the item it represents - is "Public Domain". This is not true. If you purchase an item or download it's image the copyright laws are still attached. You do not own the right to reproduce that item as you wish or to represent that item as being created by you. Simply because my creations are accessible on the internet or elsewhere does not mean that they are "in the public domain". The fact that you physically can copy my creations does not mean you have the right or that it's legal to do so.

Although I'm flattered that my creations may "inspire" others, it's not flattering to have my creations duplicated without permission. I know the line between copying someone's work and being inspired by it can be blurry at times, I would never intentionally infringe on anyone's copyright and I appreciate the same consideration for my work.
